POLICEMEN PAID COURT CLERK TO GET JOBS BACK

Saw Several Lawyers and Were Finally Reinstated Without Witnesses.

to Henry Crone, a junior Deputy Corporation Counsel, who had charge of police cases and would represent the Police Commissioner when the policemen's cases came up for review before the Appellate tefore the argument came up in the Appellate Division, the three men were reinstated by Commissioner Waldo after a retrial by Deputy Commissioner Dillon. According to the policemen, no witnesses were examined at this "retrial."

The three policemen were George F. Frey, Joseph E. Brady and John Walsh. They were dismissed by Police Commissioner Cropse; on charges of telling conflicting stories regarding Capt. John F Tappen, who was tried and dismissed. and of making false statements to the Commissioner.

Some fourteen policemen rade statements to Commissioner Cropsey regarding Tappen. The three already named, according to the charges, went back on their statements when Tappen was placed on trial.

Frey was on the stand practically all the morning. He insisted that the statement which he made to Commissione Cropsey was not correctly reported.

A considerable part of Mr. Buckner's examination of the witness was based on an alleged conversation between the witness and a man whose name was not divulged on a 167 street crosstown car on September 24 last. Counsel for the committee sought to prove by Frey himself that he was now working in a machine shop in Intervale avenue, The Bronx, on hi off time to pay up what his reinstatement cost him.

Frey admitted he had been working around the machine shop in his spare time since January 1 last, some days putting in as much as eight hours in the shop, but insisted that he did not get paid for it and that he did it only to learn automobile repair work.

In February 1911, the three policemer retained Florence J. Sullivan as their They were to pay Sullivan, Frey said, $150 apiece for taking their case to the courts. The following summer, Frey testified, Brady took him down to see James J. Green at the Appellate Division, before which the cases of the three were then pending. Frey understood was secretary to Justice In graham.

It was a social call, Frey testified, with the purpose also of getting Green to write he application to the Mayor for reinstatement and a letter to Commissioner Waldo on the same subject. Brady expained that he and Green had been friends since boyhood. Frey explained that Brady had said that Jimmy Green would "get up a good letter" for them.

The letter to Commissioner Waldo was merely a request for the granting of an interview; the application to the Mayor was a purely formal letter. Green, Frey said, did practically the work of a stenographer and later sued for $500 fees.

Frey said that Green took Brady and himself down to the Corporation Counsel's office and introduced them to Mr. Crone as the man who had charge of writing the briefs in police cases. He said he didn't know any reason for this introduction.

Frey recalled seeing Mr. Crone only on this one occasion, although Green testified in the municipal court that he had taken Frey or Brady or both to see Crone at least six times.

tinued to visit Green, Frey said. He didn't know why. The witness was asked a number of questions as to whether he had discussed the matter of reinstate-court.

Frey was certain that no lawyer represented the three policemen at the rehearing. There was nobody at the hearing but Deputy Commissioner Dillon, the three policemen one at a time and, brey thought, a stenographer. The Frey thought, a stenographer. The retrial of his case, he said, lasted five or ten minutes. Mr. Dillon asked him if he was Frey and then told him to sit down. The Deputy was reading over the minutes of the police trial before

Commissioner Cropsey.

Frey thought that Mr. Dillon asked him what he did and that he told the Deputy Commissioner he was accused of lying to the Commissioner. Then, after the five or ten minutes, Mr. Dillon said "That's all," and called in the next policeman.

the letters to Mayor Gaynor and Commissioner Waldo because he "didn't know anybody who could write a better letter than Jimmy Green." He didn't expect Green to help him in the Appellate Division, he said.

Mr. Buckner read from Brady's testimony in the Municipal Court, quoting Green: "Come down with me, Joe, and I'll introduce you to Harry Crone and when the case comes up in court Harry will have the writing of the briefs and we can fix it up." The witness wasn't sure whether the record was right in thus quoting him or not—he didn't recall giving such testimony.

Brady was sure he went to see Mr. Crone only once instead of the six times alleged by Green.

Green, an assistant clerk in the offices of the Appellate Division and a sort of acting assistant secretary to Presiding Justice Ingraham.

Green brought suit a while ago against the policemen for $500 for legal services in connection with their reunstatement. Green led the way for the policemen to the Corporation Counsel's office, where he introduced two of them to Henry Crone, a junior Deputy Corporation.

The witness became confused when he attempted to explain what good a letter to the Mayor written by Green, but signed only by the three policemen and without any indication of its authorship, would do when all each had been and without any indication of them. In describing his "retrial" Brady said that Deputy Commissioner Dillon would got them in the might of the police with a population of the Econonomic Club, the majority of them that he didn't. CHARGED WITH LARCENY

Attorney Accused of Getting $2,000 From Client by Saying He "Fixed" Judge.

Ex-State Senator Thomas C. Whitlock of Brooklyn voluntarily presented himself at the Adams street police court yes terday for arraignment before Magistrate Kempner on a charge of grand larceny in the first degree. Besides facing a charge f obtaining $2,000 under false pretenc the lawyer, according to the affidavit of George Deperino of 308 Union avenue, betraved the affiant's brother, Edward Deperino, with the result that the latter is flow serving a ten year sentence in Sing Sing. Whitlock pleaded not guilty.

The charges against Whitlock are supported by Eugene M. Hawkins of 27 William street, Manhattan, a lawyer, who was retained by Deperino to recove a part or all of the $2,000 from his brother's counsel, following the collapse of hopes founded on this expenditure. Hawkins in an affidavit says that he called on Whitlock to demand the money and that Whitlock declined to refund offering, however, to return $800. He did not have the cash, he is alleged to have said, but offered to give indorsed notes. The matter was subsequently laid before the District Attorney and a warrant secured for Whitlock's arrest. It is alleged that Whitlock secured the $2,000 from Deperino by pretending that he had "fixed" the judge so that Deperino's brother Edward would get at the most, not more than one year in Elmira. On this assurance Edward Deperino pleaded guilty, it is claimed, to manslualister in the first degree. It is said that Whitlock recommended the plea. The ten year sentence followed.

Mr. Buckner asked 1 im if he had to borrow any money at the time he was making his efforts toward reinstatement. The witness refused to answer and the committee's counsel replied quickly, "Then you'll go to the Supreme Court." Frey then answered the question in the negative.

Green, Frey testified, had told the Judge in the Municipal Court that he was ashamed to charge only $500 for his services in the matter—that the amount ought to have been $1,500. The case was settled for $50 at the noon recess of the East was assettled for $50 at the noon recess of the court.

Miss Heien King, a sister of the decedent, had obtained an order directing Miss Margaret Reichert, asserting herself to be the wildow and sole legatee of King, to show cause why letters of administration should not be issued to Miss King. She said it was not until her brother died that Miss Reichert set herself up as his widow, but that she was now in control of the hotel business and was asserting some rights. Replying to these statements the alleged widow, signing herself Margaretha Reichert King, said she had been married to King for eleven years, and that she had supplied most of the money that went into the business. She asked that she either be appointed administratik or have an equal share in the management of the estate with the decedent's sister. The Surrogate said he would require additional evidence before he decided the case.
